

The Living Library: A Resource for Teachers by Teachers

The Living Library is an online resource for teachers. Created in 2005 by the IEA retired and student programs and powered by MindUniversity technologies, the Living Library is a community of teachers who share wisdom and lesson plans with other teachers. Contributors to and consumers of the Living Library are current and retired teachers. College students preparing to become teachers also find the Living Library useful—especially for student teaching!

What is in the Living Library?

- best practices
- tested lesson plans from teachers
- links to the best of the Web
- tips and ideas on different subjects for different grades
- time saving ideas
- words of wisdom

How do I get involved in the Living Library?

To have the honor of being a contributor, teachers need to take the graduate course “Teaching and Collaborating with Technology” offered by Quincy University. Most graduate courses satisfy re-certification credit requirements and help obtain salary increases—and this is no different. But this course also gives you access to the Living Library upon completion!

Take a look at the Living Library. You will find lesson plans, resources and creative ideas for the K-12 classroom. <http://www.livinglibrary.us>.

Take an online class!

- Course is self-paced
- No meetings
- All assignments completed online
- Course is offered throughout the school year and summer
- Offered through Quincy University

COURSE: Teaching and Collaborating with Technology | 3 graduate credits, $375

CHOOSE: for grades K-8 or grades 9-12

Designed for grades K-8 or 9-12, this course provides educators with an Internet Organizer (online file cabinet) resource. Course activities focus on using the online file cabinet to save time, manage paperwork and create an easy means to share digital information with students and parents. You will have access to a community of educator file cabinets to see how cohorts are using technology to teach and collaborate.
